This is an ongoing summary of Veritatis splendor, an encyclical by Pope St. John Paul II 30 years ago. This was the first magisterial encyclical devoted entirely to issues regarding a fundamental understanding of the Church's teaching on moral theology. It is a magisterial document of the highest importance and relevance then, today, and ages to come.

Chapter Four – The moral act

The object of the deliberate act (paragraphs 76-77)

The moral theories mentioned in the previous paragraphs (consequentialism and proportionalism [or anything else along these lines]) attempt to justify a right moral decision based on intention and consequences of a human action (leaving out of the evaluation the act itself). Certainly intention matters; our Lord himself corrected the scribes and Pharisees for putting emphasis on the act alone and not the intention to justify their behavior. And certainly the consequences of an act – the good obtained and the evil avoided as a result of a particular act – is also important and responsible to consider. “But the consideration of these consequences, and also of intentions, is not sufficient for judging the moral quality of a concrete choice.” If an act is evil in itself, then neither the intention nor the consequences, even if good, can justify an act which is evil in itself. Foreseeable consequences are part of the circumstances of the act (therefore, part of the means of evaluating whether an act is morally good or bad). Good consequences may even lessen the gravity of an evil act, but they cannot justify a morally evil action. In addition, it is impermissible to evaluate a moral act solely on consequences due to the fact it is impossible to foresee all consequences or proportions to any action; one cannot measure the morality of an action based on the unknowable.

These theories of consequentialism and proportionalism are persuasive especially since they seem to be a way to liberate the human person from the constraints of the moral obligation – do good, avoid evil. But, ultimately, following this way is dehumanizing. “Such theories however are not faithful to the Church's teaching when they believe they can justify, as morally good, deliberate choices of kinds of behavior contrary to the commandments of the Divine and Natural Law. These theories [consequentialism and proportionalism] cannot claim to be grounded in the Catholic moral tradition... The faithful are obliged to acknowledge and respect the specific moral precepts declared and taught by the Church in the name of God, the Creator and Lord.”

If you are an adult not receiving Communion, please do not approach the Communion rail. Children who have not received their First Communion should not kneel or stand at the Communion rail. Children are always welcome at Sacred Liturgies, however, if children become noisy and need a break, there are speakers in O'Brien Hall and the church vestibule from which the Mass may be heard.

The St. Peter Altar Society is accepting donations and memberships during the month of January. All donations help to provide the things needed for the celebration of the Sacraments, priests' and deacons' vestments, and other liturgical needs of the church. All are invited to become members of the Altar Society. Learn how you can help care for the altars and things needed for the celebration of the Sacraments. Contact the office for details.

Friday Eucharistic Exposition is typically offered after the 8:00 am Mass until 6:00 pm. On the first Friday of the month, Exposition ends at 7:30 pm. More dedicated adorers are needed. Contact the parish office for details.

I will be out of town traveling with two other priests over the next two weekends. Please pray for safe travel while we are in a warm climate.

- Fr. Broheimer
