impossible to build up the moral order. Martyrdom's example has the ability to call all to their moral senses by the power "of a life that has been completely transfigured teaching on moral theology. It is a magisterial document by the splendor of moral truth." The martyrs among all of the highest importance and relevance then, today, and our Saints light up every era of history by reawakening this moral sense. By their blood they witness totally to the Chapter Three – Moral good for the life of the Church value of the good. Their lives and deaths echo the words of Isaiah: "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil, who put darkness for light and light for darkness, who put Martyrdom is the high point of witness to moral truth, but, obviously, not everyone is called to this extreme witness. Even so, all Christians are called to be ready to witness to the truth even if it means suffering and deep sacrifice. Being a moral creature faithful to God's Law will demand difficulties even in ordinary day to day life. commitment is possible. The virtue of Fortitude will Martyrdom is an extraordinary witness which can sustain us. As St. Gregory the Great put it, "One can
